

What your caregiver isn't telling you about your struggle to have a child

Are YOU destined to be a MOM?

You have a question...a BURNING question...about becoming a mom.

The question about your destiny of becoming a mom is plaguing you...and I understand your pain...I have what I believe is the answer.

It's what I've observed over the years as I've helped women of all types -- create a family, even when the odds appeared to be against her, even when her doctor had already closed her file.

I've helped women overcome unexplained infertility, multiple miscarriages, "infertility" caused by being with the wrong guy or being single so that they could realize their dream of becoming a mom.

But first you have to tell me
(and ask yourself), was that really your question?

Do you want to know if it's your destiny, or do you really ache to know...

"Why am I not getting pregnant?"

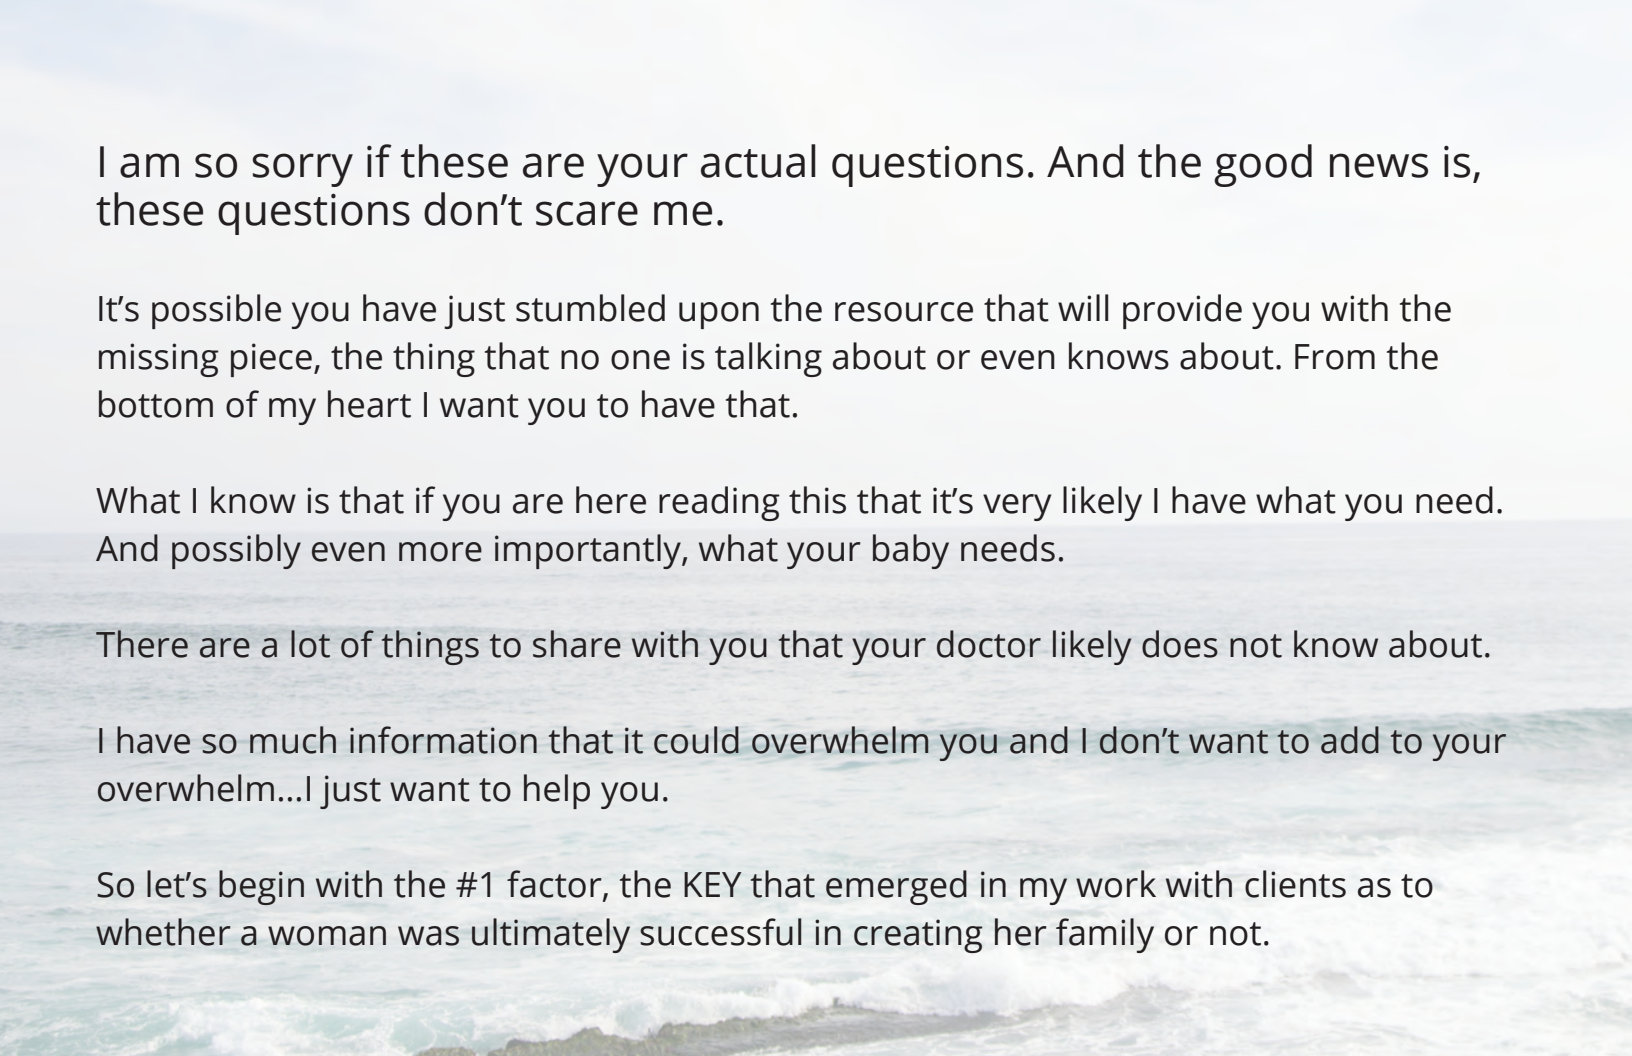

"Why am I having miscarriages?"

"Why is it that I see, feel or know that there is a baby around me and my doctor is telling me I'm not going to be a mom?"

"Why is it taking so long? Is it ever going to happen?"

OR even...

"I can't possibly go through another rupture. How can I possibly open my heart and body again to a child when I've already lost one, two, three or more?"

I am so sorry if these are your actual questions. And the good news is, these questions don't scare me.

It's possible you have just stumbled upon the resource that will provide you with the missing piece, the thing that no one is talking about or even knows about. From the bottom of my heart I want you to have that.

What I know is that if you are here reading this that it's very likely I have what you need. And possibly even more importantly, what your baby needs.

There are a lot of things to share with you that your doctor likely does not know about.

I have so much information that it could overwhelm you and I don't want to add to your overwhelm...I just want to help you.

So let's begin with the #1 factor, the KEY that emerged in my work with clients as to whether a woman was ultimately successful in creating her family or not.

It's probably not what you think and it may not even be what you want to hear. But I think when you hear it something within you is going to click and you are going to know it's true.

The number #1 key determining factor in whether or not a woman in my practice became a mom is something I call Motherhood No Matter What.

Let me explain.

Is it Motherhood No Matter What for You?

Some women become moms and some don't. Some women don't want to be moms. It's not their thing. But there are many who desperately want to create a family who are struggling for one reason or another to bring this dream of having children and a family of their own into reality. Why is it that some of the ones who struggle become moms and others do not?

On the surface, the women in the category of wanting to be a mom but struggling may seem to be the same. They might even have the same diagnosis or challenges, labeled with infertility, advanced maternal age, or experiencing multiple miscarriages.

Of course, you can attribute infertility and miscarriage to biology and other factors, yes. But why are these women that seem the same experiencing different outcomes? Is it random? Is it fate? Is there anything else going on that if identified, could help these women who desire to become a mother create a family?

I have observed key characteristics in women who beat the odds.

One of the factors was that more often than not the ones who were dogged in their commitment became moms. I call it motherhood no matter what. That phrase came to me and it's central to my philosophy, a key that lights the pathway to motherhood when it might seem completely dark.

This is a very good thing to figure out.

- Is it motherhood no matter what for you?
- How far are you willing to go?
- Are you willing to open your mind and heart to alternate pathways than what you have planned (ie. what about adoption, IVF, surrogacy?)
- Are you willing to dive into uncomfortable feelings that might be buried from a childhood trauma?
- Are you willing to leave your partner if that is what is called for?
- Are you willing to have a child on your own?
- Is motherhood the priority for you?
- Do you feel like it is an important part of your life purpose to be a mother?

Second, they created a team around them and they stuck with that team for a good amount of time, they didn't just hop from one strategy to the next when it didn't yield a pregnancy or baby right away. They did their work, they got into the tough places. They resourced themselves well.

And then they showed flexibility. They allowed the Divine Feminine to lead their journey. Your baby may have a plan of his own about how he wants to come and as with parenting, there are things you simply cannot control in this process of becoming a parent.

Some examples for you of women who overcame their obstacles:

A 42-year old woman called me in tears after her doctor had just patted her shoulder saying, "You're not going to be a mother in this life, sorry kid." While she watched, he stamped her file "Advanced Maternal Age" and dismissed her from his practice. She called me in despair. She sensed a little baby boy around her. Was she making it up? Could I help? We began working together every month, moving through all of her obstacles one at a time. Within a year she was pregnant, had a healthy pregnancy and is now raising her healthy baby boy.

A woman who had experienced 8 miscarriages and whose doctors had all but given up on her came into my practice, referred by her trusted Naturopath. She and her husband dove into the layers in their personalities, emotions, bodies and souls that were creating blocks to becoming parents. 5 months of coming into alignment with their baby's energy, unearthing and clearing uncomfortable patterns to heal and overcome, they became pregnant and carried to term a healthy baby boy.

A woman who had experienced fertility challenges for 2 years received a call that a baby needed a home due to a tragic accident. In that moment, with chills throughout her body and her heart opening wide, she dropped her agenda about how it would happen and surrendered to motherhood through adoption. Because of one group session we had done, she was able to recognize when she got the phone call that this child was her child, the one she'd been preparing for. This was her little girl.

A 39 year old woman realized it was motherhood no matter what for her and decided to leave her beloved husband who was unwilling to have children with her. She was heartbroken, but committed. In her timeline she met a wonderful man, got married and had 2 healthy children.

These are remarkable stories of women who are just like you. It was motherhood no matter what for every single one of them.

And you know what?

For a lot of women, it is not motherhood no matter what. There is absolutely nothing wrong with that. It is not better to be one way or the other. In my opinion, what's better is to be true to what is right for you. To realize that it's not and choose it is healing and empowering. If you think motherhood is absolutely for you or if you aren't sure yet, then take your journey to the limit, to the absolute line that it is for you. If you reach a point where you just can't or don't wish to go further, claim it. Heal and grieve and reclaim your generative power for the expression of your purpose through other means. That is just as heroic as the stories above.

Some examples could be that you decide that your marriage is your priority, and you choose that over having children. You might find that healing childhood trauma you experienced is just too much too fast and you don't want to put yourself through that healing process at an accelerated pace.

Maybe your body is so so tired from all of the hormones and medical procedures and you decide that is enough, that you don't want to put yourself through it any longer, maybe it's a financial reason. Some women realize it wasn't their dream to begin with, it was the influence of their culture, their family, their friends or their partner's dream. It's OK to shift gears, complete this phase of your life and move on.

If you can give yourself the gift of your commitment, of playing full out and going for it you will be able to achieve peace and completion. You will either become a mom in your own unique way, or you will know that you did everything in your power that you are willing and capable of doing, and you are complete.

Navigating this journey as an empowered, conscious woman sets you up for success as a mom or for the rest of your life at peace with your decision to refocus your generative power and energy. You won't have regrets or wonder what might have been if only you'd have tried something else.

So, you need to decide...

...is it Motherhood No Matter What for you?

If you'd like to go deeper in understanding more about your specific situation, I've created a few questions for you to answer so I can start sending you the appropriate information.

CLICK HERE TO BEGIN THE QUESTIONNAIRE

Vibrational Child

P.O. Box 5805

Santa Monica, CA 90409

Voice mail 310-305-0430

support@beingincollaboration.com

www.vibrationalchild.com